Workshop on Eve teasing

Date 11/1/2023.

Time 12.00 to 02.00pm

Dr. Shivam Saxena and Dr. Shashi Mishra were the resource people who provided the workshop keynote talk in order to inform the female staff members and female students about the consequences on women of the one-day session on the prior kind of sexual harassment known as Eve Teasing. Here is a synopsis of the speaker's remarks.

The unwelcome and undesired provocation of a sexual nature by means of words, gestures, body language, or visual aids is known as sexual harassment. It frequently takes a toll on the victim's mental health. In India, a prevalent form of sexual harassment that regularly takes place in public settings is called "eve teasing." Although there are few prevalence studies and inconsistent evaluation techniques, Eve teasing is thought to occur often since between 50% and 100% of women report being victimized. Using offensive gestures, whistling, stalking, squeezing, fondling, and rubbing up against women are a few specific instances.

It is quite problematic for the Indian community to make fun of Eve. In India, talking about men harassing women sexually in public is referred to as Eve teasing. There are major opportunity costs for women and society as a whole when women and girls in India are prevented from engaging in public life, such as attending school or working, due to the widespread fear of Eve teasing.

The prevalent victimizing gender roles in today's culture not only put women's safety in jeopardy, but they also run the risk of making them feel even worse about themselves. Indian women are generally appreciated for assuming important household responsibilities like those of chaste and modest wives, mothers, daughters-in-law, and daughters.

Both of the primary speakers address the legal aspects of Eve teasing and give a detailed discussion of the steps the Indian penal code takes to prevent this serious problem.
